Tamma Srinivasa Reddy is an impulsive photographer. His photographs frame ideas and words in pictures. His amateurish stint in photography metamorphosed into a serious professionalism from 1984 onwards. Monochrome slides and colour photographs are an integral part of his panels today touching upon various shades of photography. He trains young photographers and teaches the art to children in various schools. He played a pivotal role in promoting and supporting photographers' associations. Honors, awards and laurels came rolling his way. Today he chairs the photojournalism division of IIPC and conducts national and international photo salons and workshops on photography. He won prestigious competitions at regional, national and international levels. He regularly contributes to various journals and periodicals in and out of India. His tryst with camera is a continuing saga. For him, the rest is photography.
